ANCIENTS TRAILED BY EMPTY BOTTLES

Boston's Artillery Heroes Sail Around and Around on Undrinkable Water.

With Cries for "Wilson, That's All," They Then Entrain for Atlantic City.

Just when editors and other remutable folk were about to turn in yesterday norning toward dawn along came a teleepondents in Boston-who ought to know by this time when to call a day a day-informing local newspaper men that the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, Capt. Walter E. Lombard in command, had just left Roston for Atlantic City, via Manhattan, to take part in a 279th annual field day of some kind or other.

The came a hard day for the searchers for the Ancients, once the parental interviewers had rounded the last empty bottle and had returned to the Forty-second street ferry with notions of picking up the red and blue clad Boston heroes in the Longacre Square neighborhood.

First the reporters went to the Old Guard headquarters at 223 West Fifty-first street. Who answered the doorhell' Noted. The old Guarders had got the flash also that the Ancients were coming to town, whereing every old and young timerier stayed around the home fireside yesterday—or at least so the trap of the Ancients from Boston to Manhattan could be learned. The skipper of the hom who refused permission to use he made or the name of his line—said that from the moment he shipped his carge on Saturday might until the Ancients life have yesterday he had bething to worry about except the fact that they all refused stateroom keys when they came aboard. It seems that

Just off the Dumpling Rock light a few of the cargo listed, but were replaced before serious damage resulted.
Then off the Hen and Chicken light-Then off the Hen and Chicken lightslip a committee was appointed, so the skipper said, to wait upon him and ask his reasons why the boat was insisting upon going around and around and around and around and around and around and around and around.

The committee, speaking for the entire organization, said that the boat must either proceed on its way or be slowed down sufficiently to permit the entire lody of Ancients to step off the starboard pizzazza and leave the old ship flat.

Less than an hour before daylight the skipper persuaded the committee to stick abourd at least as far as Manhattan, where their grievances could be settled aboard at lear as where their grievances could be settled by the proper authorities. The chairman thereupon put it up to the chief steward to decide the question whether the committee was right or wrong.

"Fair enough." remarked Skipper Durkin, the whole idea having now settled into him; and he did various things around the forward part of the cockpit which sent the little boat north by east at a fancy speed.

But Blackwell's Island had been leftenly a few lengths behind when the resporter, happening to look over the side in an idle moment, noticed a peculiar thing. The first rays of the rising sun were lighting up the East River in a startling way. A moment's observation showed the investigator that the reason the river surface positively was exploding with light was that the sun rays were playing upon the glistening sides of bottles—all empty.

Mr. Lemp, Mr. Acheuser, Mr. Busch, Mr. Pabst, Mr. Doeker, the Messrs, Ruppert, Bendleston, Woerz, Ehret—all, all, all were represented on the sunkist waters.

"Stand by to go about—whatever that means," cried the war correspondent to the skipper handling the gas kicker.

"Follow the trail of empty bottles, let the bottles lead where they may. The Ancleuse lad where they may. The Ancleuse lad where they may. The Ancleus lad where they may the Ancleus lad where they may. The Ancleus lad where they may the Ancleus have passed and probably are already warping into a Manhattan dock."

When the gas kicked tramp was off Getty square, Yonkers, shortly before noon even the reporter was ready to say that enough was enough. But just when it seemed that the whole idea of speedies up the Hudson to find folk headed for attailed. City was ridiculous the trail of empty bottles grew raiddly more vague and finally petered out entirely just off Dobbs Ferry

Her Baby Boy.

The effectiveness of the scenes showing the little play would be much greater if the fact that the emancipated young woman is the author of it were made clearer. It is entirely possible to surmise this fact after a while. But all the humor that the play contains would be emphasized by fuller knowledge of the circumstances under which the interposition provided in the Queensborough.
